

WORKBOOK
NINETY DAYS

Transition OS

Ninety days, from wondering whether you're allowed to leave to interviewing outside the clinic.

THE EIGHT STOPS

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7
Start	Ground	Explore	Connect	Translate	Test	Leap	After
☐	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐	☐

Name

Started on

Print it, or type straight into it.

What's in here

Your starting line	What an hour of your work pays now, and the number the next job has to clear	☐
Bad week, or time to go	Answer the same thing in week 1, 6 and 12 so one bad Tuesday does not decide it	☐
Why leaving isn't a wasted degree	Why the years and the debt already spent are not a reason to stay	☐
Your why, in writing	What you actually want to leave, so you know what to look for in the next job	☐
What you'll miss	What you give up by leaving, and which parts you can keep anyway	☐
Telling the first person	Say it out loud to one person, and plan exactly what you'll say first	☐
Kept private	Six settings to change before anyone at work can guess, and your staff-room sentence	☐
Informational interview sheet	What to ask someone who already left, and how to turn one call into two	☐
Interview prep on one page	Your 45-second intro, and answering 'why are you leaving' without saying burnout	☐
Negotiating the offer	Your opening number and your walk-away floor, decided before the phone rings	☐
Six months in	What's different on a Tuesday now, and what you'd tell someone in week one	☐

Do the lesson on screen first. It does the maths, the sorting and the ranking, and it keeps your answers.

Write badly. Fragments, half-sentences, a list. If you catch yourself drafting sentences, you have switched into work mode.

LESSON 0.2 · THE MONEY PAGE

Your starting line

What an hour of your work pays now, and the number the next job has to clear. The lesson does the arithmetic; write the answers here.

What an hour pays now

Salary now Gross, before tax
Hours in a real week Including the evenings and the Sunday notes
Weeks worked a year A school year is about 39
Your real hourly rate Salary divided by hours times weeks. The lesson shows it, and what the same salary pays at forty hours

The number the next job has to clear

Monthly expenses The real month, not the good one
Tax you assume Federal, state and the 7.65% payroll share. Your guess, as a percentage
The annual floor Expenses times twelve, grossed up for the tax. Below this you decline
The date When you want to be somewhere else. A month and a year

LESSON 0.2 · THE TRADES

What you would trade to get there

Tick the ones that are genuinely on the table. The lesson uses these to rule paths in and out.

- ☐ Move city or state
- ☐ Take a pay dip for the first year
- ☐ Go without employer benefits for a while
- ☐ Commute again
- ☐ Give up remote work
- ☐ Work in an office with other people every day

The one you ticked that surprised you, and why it is on the table now when it was not a year ago.

WEEKS 1, 6 AND 12

Bad week, or time to go

Answer these in week 1, then again in week 6 and week 12. One bad Tuesday should not be the thing that decides it.

	Week 1	Week 6	Week 12
Date
The stage you are in
Bad workplace, bad fit, or bad season
The path you would name today
Your pay floor

Where you are going, in one sentence. Write a new one each time rather than editing the old one.

Three sentences by week twelve. The first one is usually about leaving and the last one usually is not.

MODULE 1 • SUNK COST

Why leaving isn't a wasted degree

The years and the debt are already spent either way. This is where you stop counting them as a reason to stay.

Write it exactly as it sounds in your head. Not the reasonable version.

It usually starts with "after all that" or "I should be able to".

"I know it's the sunken cost fallacy but it's so hard to quit after putting so much time, money, and effort into this career." an SLP, r/slp

Who taught you that sentence? A supervisor, a cohort, a parent, yourself at twenty-four.

What would you say to a CF who said it to you, word for word?

People are consistently kinder to a hypothetical CF than to themselves. Use the kinder version.

MODULE 1 · THE CHECKPOINT

Your why, in writing

What you want to leave, in your own words, so you know what you are looking for in the next job.

Everything you want to leave. Names, days, specific meetings, the thing you have never said out loud. Do not soften it.

Nobody reads this.

Read it back, and mark the three that would still be true in a different building.

Those three are about the work. Everything else is about this job, and that is a different problem with a faster fix.

MODULE 1 · WHAT YOU KEEP

What you'll miss

Name it now. The people who skip this are the ones who end up going back.

Finish the sentence: I will miss being the person who ...

"I've taken a long time to grieve the loss of who I was in my previous role." a comment on a former SLP's essay about leaving

Which part of that goes with you into any job? A moment, a person, a session. Be specific.

Which part only exists in a clinic, and what will you do about that outside work?

MODULE 1 • LESSON 7

Telling the first person

Say it out loud to one person. Plan who, when, and what you will say.

Who Not a colleague, if you can avoid it
When A date, not "soon"
What you plan to say One sentence

What you actually said, and what they said back.

Fill this in afterwards. People are almost always less surprised than you expect them to be.

--

What changed for you in the hour after.

--

MODULE 1 · LESSON 7, BEFORE YOU SAY IT

Kept private

Six settings and habits from lesson 1.7, so the search stays yours until you decide otherwise. Tick them as you do them.

- ☐ LinkedIn: "Share profile updates with your network" is off
- ☐ LinkedIn: Open to Work is set to recruiters only, not the banner
- ☐ Applications and job alerts go to a personal email, never the work one
- ☐ Nobody at your current job is listed as a reference
- ☐ You know your contract window or notice period, and the date it falls on
- ☐ The one sentence for the staff room is ready: "I'm looking at what else I could do with my SLP background."

That sentence in your own words, the way you would actually say it at the copier.

If they ask what: "I don't know yet. I'm finding out." True, and it ends the conversation on your terms.

MODULE 3 · SHEET 1 OF 2

Informational interview sheet

Keep this open while you talk. Their answers, in their words.

Who, their title now, and the date

How you found them

How did you get the first one? Walk me through the six months before the offer.

What does a Tuesday actually look like?

What part of the clinical background turned out to be useful, and what did you drop?

Who else should I be talking to?

The question that turns one conversation into two.

The sentence you are taking away, and what you do in the next fortnight because of it.

You asked for fifteen minutes. Running over it is the fastest way to not get a second conversation.

MODULE 3 · SHEET 2 OF 2

Informational interview sheet

Keep this open while you talk. Their answers, in their words.

Who, their title now, and the date

How you found them

How did you get the first one? Walk me through the six months before the offer.

What does a Tuesday actually look like?

What part of the clinical background turned out to be useful, and what did you drop?

Who else should I be talking to?

The question that turns one conversation into two.

The sentence you are taking away, and what you do in the next fortnight because of it.

You asked for fifteen minutes. Running over it is the fastest way to not get a second conversation.

MODULE 6 · INTERVIEW 1 OF 2

Interview prep on one page

Take this in with you, decided in advance rather than in the room.

Company, role and date

Who you are speaking to

Your bridge statement

Where you are going, how you prepared, one accomplishment with a number in it. Forty-five seconds.

Write it out, then say it aloud five times before you go in.

Three stories, each with a number in itStory 1

The number

Story 2

The number

Story 3

The number

Three questions for them: the first ninety days, what the last person found hard, how the work gets measured.

Burnout is a true reason and a bad answer. Answer with where you are going, not what you are leaving.

MODULE 6 · INTERVIEW 2 OF 2

Interview prep on one page

Take this in with you, decided in advance rather than in the room.

Company, role and date

Who you are speaking to

Your bridge statement

Where you are going, how you prepared, one accomplishment with a number in it. Forty-five seconds.

Write it out, then say it aloud five times before you go in.

Three stories, each with a number in itStory 1

The number

Story 2

The number

Story 3

The number

Three questions for them: the first ninety days, what the last person found hard, how the work gets measured.

Burnout is a true reason and a bad answer. Answer with where you are going, not what you are leaving.

MODULE 6 • THE OFFER

Negotiating the offer

Your opening number and your walk-away floor, decided before the phone rings.

The number you say first The top of the documented range for your path
Your floor Below this you decline. Write it now, not on the call
The date you will answer by

The three things you ask for if the base will not move

Ask 1 Sign-on, PTO, remote days, start date, an early review
Ask 2
Ask 3

Say it out loud once before you say it to them

The sentence that feels outrageous in your head almost always sounds reasonable in the air.

The exact words you will use.

About thirty percent of people negotiate, and two thirds or more of those who ask get something. Hiring managers report fewer than two withdrawn offers across roughly twenty-seven they have made.

MODULE 7 · AFTER

Six months in

Fill this in when you are on the other side.

What is different on a Tuesday now? Compare it with the first pass on the three-passes page.

What did you worry about that turned out not to matter?

What would you tell the person who is where you were in week one?

That last answer is your story. The form is at slptransitions.com/about.

You did the whole thing.

Whatever the title says now, you are still the person who can explain hard things simply, hold a room to a plan, and read a page of data and know what to do next. That was never the job. That was you.