

The translation pass

One page to hold beside the résumé. Every bullet answers three questions: how big was it, what did you do, what changed. Swapping nouns produces word salad; answering the questions produces evidence.

Clinical sentence, translated, not swapped

WHAT YOU DID	WHAT A HIRING MANAGER CAN PICTURE
Managed a caseload of 62 students with IEPs	Managed 62 concurrent client accounts, each with goals, a timeline and a quarterly review
Ran IEP meetings with teachers, admin and parents	Led cross-functional meetings with families and staff to agree goals, timelines and who does what
Wrote daily therapy notes and progress reports	Kept audit-ready documentation and quarterly outcome reports, finished the same day for a year
Helped roll out the new EMR	Supported a system rollout: trained 14 colleagues, built the note templates, tracked adoption
Convinced a skeptical parent to try a treatment plan	Handled objections and won agreement from a resistant stakeholder, then kept them through a two-week trial
Explained a diagnosis to a family in plain language	Translated technical findings into plain-language guidance for people with no clinical background
Tracked session data and adjusted goals	Reviewed outcome data weekly and changed the plan when the numbers said to
Supervised CFs and grad students	Onboarded and mentored new hires through their first year

The swap, seen in the wild: “Orchestrated daily end-to-end client workflows for premium accounts, maintaining 100% data compliance.” It could describe a hotel concierge. Yours should name the size, the work and the result in words anyone can check.

Two tests for every line

- ☐ The colleague test. If any SLP down the hall could have written it about their own year, it is a job description, not evidence. Cut it.
- ☐ The ten-minute test. If you could not talk for ten minutes about the day behind that number without inventing anything, take the number down or the claim out.

The last pass before you attach it

- ☐ Summary leads with the function and the years, not the credential
- ☐ Title stays Speech-Language Pathologist; the translation is a function line under it
- ☐ Every bullet has a number that could be checked
- ☐ No ICD codes, modalities, billing or legal-charting language
- ☐ EMR listed as a system you ran, beside Sheets, Zoom, the project tool you used
- ☐ Three of the posting's own requirement lines appear, in their words, up top
- ☐ One page under ten years, two at most; file named Firstname-Lastname-Role.pdf
